Notes for CHOCTAW CHIEF PUSHMATAHA:

Louis LeFlore served with Pushmataha when Pushmataha became an American Army Officer under Andrew Jackson in the War of 1812. Promoted Major. He served three months in 1814 also. Roscoe Cole, an Englishman married an Indian wife about 1760. One of their daughters became the wife of John Cravat. Some say Cravat was English while others say that he was French. Daughters left in Choctaw Nation were named Nancy and Rebecca and were neices of Choctaw Chief Pushmataha.

Louis Leflore married Nancy and Rebecca Cravat about 1790 in Choctaw ceremonies, some say in the same ceremony at same time. Louis had sisters Margueritte who married Cornelius McCurtin c 1792 and sister Louisa to Hugo Daniel Krebs in 1796. He is believed to have used Pass Christian, MS as home in the early years of marriage. Chief Pushmataha had a sister named Natona who was Chief Nittakechi's mother. Pushmataha led Choctaws against Creeks in 1811 under Andrew Jackson. Signed Treaty 1820 and went to Washington, DC where he died Dec 23, 1824.

Successor as Chief fell to his nephew (on his wife's side) by name of Oklahoma. He had a nephew named Nitakachieubih (Nitakechi). Pushmataha's sister was Natona. Her daughter Shanke who had a daughter. Natona's great grand daughter was Eliza Ann Juzan Flack. John Charles Juzan took 2 wives, nieces of Pushmataha -- Peggy Trahern and Phoebe, dau of Oklahoma.

Pushmataha was in Creek Battle 1811-1813, Fought in Battle of New Orleans with Andrew Jackson 1814. Engaged at Horseshoe Bend with Sam Houston. His weaknesses: Gambling and liquor. The morning of Pushmataha's death, the Washington Gazette carried the following news item:

"This morning, a few minutes after 12 O'Clock, Pushmataha, the principal chief of a district of the Choctaw Nation of Indians, died. He departed this life at the hotel of Mr. Joseph Tenneson in this city where he has been residing with other Choctaw delegates, during their late pending negotiations with the Government for the disposal of a portion of the lands of the Nation.

This chief was remarkable for his personal courage and skill in war, having engaged in twenty-four battles, several of which were fought under General Jackson. He was emphatically the friend of white men, never having raised his arm in hostility against them.

Pushmataha was also a man of great eloquence. He possessed a rich and fertile imagination with a sound understanding, and was classed by his Choctaw countrymen among the first of their warriors, and was considered the greatest of their orators.

He fell a victim of the distressing malady of croup and at the time of his death was 58 years of age. He bore his affliction with great firmness, was conscious of his approaching end, and predicted with unusual sagacity the hour at which he should die. This prediction was literally fulfilled.

We had a personal opportunity of witnessing the last moments of this chief and are satisfied that death had few or no terrors for him. He gave with great composure directions of his property, recommended his family to the fatherly care of the Nation, and breathed his last amid the tears and regrets of his companions and acquaintances. Whilst living he had conciliated the friendship of all who knew him."

Chief Pushmataha, Choctaw Indian Family History

Aaran Anderson Slade born Feb. 22, 1849 died May 19, 1980. Her grandfather came from Dancing Rabbit Creek. She was a descendant of Pushmataha, the Great Chieftain of the Choctaws. Time or space wouldn't permit me to go into detail. But there are many families ties in this area. They lived on Little Black Creek and after her death she was buried in the Old Anderson Cemetery near the creek. This cemetery has been destroyed and only one marker is left in the area. John Anderson died as an infant. This place is located west of I-59 Highway near Little Black Creek.
